From Drought to Floods

Only a few weeks ago we were experiencing the worst drought in 50 years with Sun Moon Lake (pictured above) parched dry. Many counties in central Taiwan were under water rationing measures with pipes being shut two days a week.

With a rapid turn of events, this past week has brought plum rains and even flooding in some parts of Taiwan (Taipei, pictured on right). Nobody is complaining, with many (particularly our farmers) seeing this as an answer to prayer. In any other year, one might see the floods as a nuisance, even "bad luck." But given what had transpired before, these waters are a welcome sight and even, perhaps, a blessing in disguise.

When bad things happen in our lives, we can view them as either a punishment or a situation where God wants to bring about blessing? However, a prerequisite to this blessing is often first a posture of thirst and acknowledging our need for God.
